Environmental Justice Intern Position Description

As the Environmental Justice (EJ) intern, the mission is to enhance the collective understanding of environmentalism and sustainable practices from a critical and intersectional lens. This internship is housed under the Office of Sustainability and Facility Services. The position entails: creating workshops and programs for the SDSU community; facilitating collaborative work between the Office of Sustainability, on-campus entities, and student organizations; supporting fellow interns in integrating Environmental Justice into their respective work; the ability to collect data or gauge how effective their efforts are in a quantitative way and completing research and readings that support the above tasks and mission. Education on environmental justice issues will be the largest component in this position.

Environmental justice is where environmentalism, sustainability and social justice meet. Environmental Justice encompasses multiple topics where sustainability and social equity meet including transportation, food insecurity and climate justice.

We are looking for someone who would have experience in and is passionate about: engaging with social justice/equity; having a critical and intersectional lens to view sustainability issues and solutions; the ability to compile and disseminate information in an engaging and meaningful way; and a broad understanding of environmentalism and sustainability topics. The Environmental justice intern is a position where collaboration across campus and building-out educational components of this position (workshops, etc.) are necessary. The successful candidate is expected to be self-motivated and determined. While some tasks will be provided, the EJ Intern is expected to develop their own tasks to meet the program goals. They enjoy being around people and forming new relationships. This position has aspects that must be performed on campus (i.e., building and cultivating relationships across campus), as well as aspects that can be done remotely.

The candidate is expected to work about ten hours a week (we are flexible with academic schedules and needs). If there is enough work, this can increase to twenty hours per week. This position is paid and can also be used to meet internship requirements, provided it is approved by their program. The application consists of a resume submission and an interview via video calling.

To apply, please email resumes to sustainable@sdsu.edu by ASAP.

Please send any questions to awduncan@sdsu.edu.

To learn about the Office of Sustainability in general, please visit sustainable.sdsu.edu.